

www.konstantin-fischer-hania.com/what-is-wrong-with-us
more:

Konstantin Fischer, 2016
The arrogance, self-centredness and egoism in this European discourse – a side effect of some 25 years of neo-liberal policies in Europe – become evident if one pays attention to the media's double standard: the indifference toward Muslim victims of crimes is in stark contrast to the compassion shown toward European, non-Muslim victims. This media coverage becomes a vicious circle of pandering to the racist mob and populist right-wing politicians, and then continuing to sell out to the lowest common denominator in order to keep selling the media products.

Some 1.5 million refugees, mostly from Syria and Afghanistan, did manage to reach Europe at a time when the continent has been torn by nationalism, xenophobia, islamophobia and anti-Semitism, all of it steeped in racism: mass hysteria has blamed Muslims in general, and Muslim refugees in particular, for crimes carried out by people the vast majority of whom have been brought up in Western or Central Europe but who have been marginalized by and/or within these Western societies.

In 2014 and 2015, more than 7000 individuals, among them several hundred children, drowned in the Mediterranean while seeking refuge in the European Union. They were fleeing the violence brought to their home regions mainly by the West.

www.konstantin-fischer-hania.com/what-is-wrong-with-us
more:

Konstantin Fischer, 2016
The arrogance, self-centredness and egoism in this European discourse – a side effect of some 25 years of neo-liberal policies in Europe – become evident if one pays attention to the media's double standard: the indifference toward Muslim victims of crimes is in stark contrast to the compassion shown toward European, non-Muslim victims. This media coverage becomes a vicious circle of pandering to the racist mob and populist right-wing politicians, and then continuing to sell out to the lowest common denominator in order to keep selling the media products.

Some 1.5 million refugees, mostly from Syria and Afghanistan, did manage to reach Europe at a time when the continent has been torn by nationalism, xenophobia, islamophobia and anti-Semitism, all of it steeped in racism: mass hysteria has blamed Muslims in general, and Muslim refugees in particular, for crimes carried out by people the vast majority of whom have been brought up in Western or Central Europe but who have been marginalized by and/or within these Western societies.

In 2014 and 2015, more than 7000 individuals, among them several hundred children, drowned in the Mediterranean while seeking refuge in the European Union. They were fleeing the violence brought to their home regions mainly by the West.

www.konstantin-fischer-hania.com/what-is-wrong-with-us
more:

Konstantin Fischer, 2016
The arrogance, self-centredness and egoism in this European discourse – a side effect of some 25 years of neo-liberal policies in Europe – become evident if one pays attention to the media's double standard: the indifference toward Muslim victims of crimes is in stark contrast to the compassion shown toward European, non-Muslim victims. This media coverage becomes a vicious circle of pandering to the racist mob and populist right-wing politicians, and then continuing to sell out to the lowest common denominator in order to keep selling the media products.

Some 1.5 million refugees, mostly from Syria and Afghanistan, did manage to reach Europe at a time when the continent has been torn by nationalism, xenophobia, islamophobia and anti-Semitism, all of it steeped in racism: mass hysteria has blamed Muslims in general, and Muslim refugees in particular, for crimes carried out by people the vast majority of whom have been brought up in Western or Central Europe but who have been marginalized by and/or within these Western societies.

In 2014 and 2015, more than 7000 individuals, among them several hundred children, drowned in the Mediterranean while seeking refuge in the European Union. They were fleeing the violence brought to their home regions mainly by the West.

www.konstantin-fischer-hania.com/what-is-wrong-with-us
more:

Konstantin Fischer, 2016
The arrogance, self-centredness and egoism in this European discourse – a side effect of some 25 years of neo-liberal policies in Europe – become evident if one pays attention to the media's double standard: the indifference toward Muslim victims of crimes is in stark contrast to the compassion shown toward European, non-Muslim victims. This media coverage becomes a vicious circle of pandering to the racist mob and populist right-wing politicians, and then continuing to sell out to the lowest common denominator in order to keep selling the media products.

Some 1.5 million refugees, mostly from Syria and Afghanistan, did manage to reach Europe at a time when the continent has been torn by nationalism, xenophobia, islamophobia and anti-Semitism, all of it steeped in racism: mass hysteria has blamed Muslims in general, and Muslim refugees in particular, for crimes carried out by people the vast majority of whom have been brought up in Western or Central Europe but who have been marginalized by and/or within these Western societies.

In 2014 and 2015, more than 7000 individuals, among them several hundred children, drowned in the Mediterranean while seeking refuge in the European Union. They were fleeing the violence brought to their home regions mainly by the West.